Every Credit Union Needs a Great Marketing Plan.

A well-written strategic Marketing Plan is an important part of the future of your credit union. Without a plan in place, marketing becomes reactive instead of proactive. Or even worse, becomes nothing at all. Marketing frequency is the number one driver of success. Be where your members go (online and in-person) or you will lose business. Remember that your competition is after your members and their business.

Some of the core elements that must be included as part of every Marketing Plan include:

Identification of Core Growth Goals

It is vital to identify your core goals before you can prepare a solid Marketing & Growth Plan. You must always focus on your most important goals first. Don't get sidetracked. Be sure to spend the majority of your marketing budget toward your most important goals. I know that some of these goals may sound simplistic, but we've found that far too many credit unions really don't take the time to set goals. They may look at numbers from time to time, but no clear plan is in place to achieve them.

Some goals you may want measure are:

- Loan Growth (By loan type)
- Asset Growth (By product)
- Product Growth & Use (By services)
- Member Growth (New members)

Many credit unions tell us that their number one goal is member growth. New members are great, but deepening the member relationship is just as important. Remember that most members joined for a new product or service. As a result, promotions with compelling product and service offers will attract new members.

Brand Image Review

Take a look at your brand and see if it truly portrays who you are. Be sure your credit union has a well-defined brand. Just as you begin with plans and blueprints when you construct a building, building a brand requires lots of discussion, feedback, research and interaction on a variety of levels. Don't guess at your brand. It's important to understand the elements that will contribute to and help you define who you are and why people choose to do business with you. It starts internal and works its way external.

A brand is much more than visual. It is the foundation of who you are, why you do what you do, and how members perceive your credit union. Ask yourself if you stand out, or do you look just like every other credit union or bank. Remember that you do not own your brand, your members do.

Review Past & Current Marketing Efforts

An objective review of your current and past marketing is important and helps you to learn more about your Credit Union. Step back and see if your marketing during the last couple years has truly shown members and non-members what makes you unique and has focused on your most important goals. Do you see conversions and success with what you have been doing?

Measurement of conversions is an important thing to consider. During a loan promotion for instant, were you able to track leads by phone, branch visits, clicks on digital marketing, applications, closed loans and services that were opened during the campaign.

Analyze Your Data and Research

A marketing plan should also be based upon as much data as possible. Applying a variety of member and non-member research and analytics can help in determining your best targets and increase your ROI dramatically. Depending upon your core system, CRM, and your ability to mine data will make a difference in how you can track results and conversions. For some credit unions, this information may not be readily available.

The good news is that there is lots of industry research and data that can be applied and will help during the planning stages of creating your marketing plan. Peer data is helpful during this stage since it allows you to not only look at your trends, but the growth and trends of your peers. By having data to compare against, it allows for a better view of what's truly happening. Charting trends on a monthly, quarterly and yearly basis will allow you to easily see your growth progress and also identify your weaknesses.

Age Segmentation

One of the key drivers of product relationships and use is age. Charting your membership based upon age must be part of your Marketing & Growth Plan. It's amazing how lifestyle and age segmentation influence the use of financial products and services. Effective targeting by age will produce impressive results when combined with other demographic factors and credit scores.

Almost every credit union considers attracting more young members as one of their highest goals. Of course this makes sense, and young members are great. We must do everything in our power to try and bring more on board as members. However, keep in mind that most credit unions generate the greatest income from members ages 35 to 55. So, maybe you will not attract as many young members as you would like now, but you can attract them in the future when they become prime borrowers. They are at a completely different point in their life and using smart, targeted, lifestyle marketing can be the bait to have them join your credit union.

Product Alterations and Additions

As part of your plan, you should identify any short and long-term product goals that may help you to be more successful. Make your short and long-term wish list of new or updated services and move on the ones that are most important and will help to achieve your most important goals. For example, right now many credit unions identify getting more loans as their greatest goal. Therefore, products and services that will contribute to this core goal should be of the highest priority.

Any service that helps streamline and speed your lending process is most likely a good investment. When it comes to lending, it's not always rate driven. Many times it's about how easy it is to apply and how quickly a loan can get approved and closed. People today want fast!

Services that offer your member 24/7 access to their money are also vitally important. Bank of American is the #1 financial institution for young people. Is this because of their low fees? Not at all! It's because they make it super easy to do business and for people to manage their money a variety of ways. Their brand footprint also offers access in thousands of locations nationwide. Investing in improved mobile banking products, P2P services and other smart apps is really important if we want to maintain and attract new members.

Implementation of Marketing Elements

Marketing department structure will vary depending upon your needs and management style. Keep in mind that you can break marketing down into a number of core areas.

- Marketing Strategy – The big picture of your goals
- Marketing Execution – Internal creation vs external creation
- Marketing Elements – What are you doing (Digital, Direct Mail, Newsletters, Websites, Etc.)
- Events – Community, Internal and partner events
- Business Development – Sales calls, visits, educational seminars, etc.

Depending upon your credit union's marketing and support team, your plan should determine the most efficient way to implement marketing projects. This may mean bringing in additional internal support or outsourcing marketing in some areas. If you are not an experienced marketer, you may want to consider working with an outside partner(s) that has the experience to drive your marketing in the right direction.

Building a Marketing Plan Page

Each promotion should have its own page. The page(s) should outline the entire project. Each page may include the name of the project, the target group, the start date, incentives and more. It can provide a brief overview of the project and the primary goals. Keep in mind that not every detail of the project needs to be outlined during the planning stage. Deciding on exact creative, offers and other details should be discussed prior to kicking each project off.

Marketing Project

Timing: Date to Date 2018

Target(s): Current & Potential Members

Incentive(s): To Be Determined

Project Overview: This is where you can create your description of the marketing project or marketing element. It should provide a basic overview of the product or service that will be promoted and also capture any other early-stage ideas that you may be considering. Keep in mind that this may, and many times will, change when you actually get ready to implement the specific project. This is the ideal time to get feedback from everyone in your organization that will contribute or be impacted by this project.

Total $0,000.00

Notes: Something can be included here such as a reminder, previous project, or an idea to consider so it can serve as a reminder when you go to start a new project.

Marketing Calendar

One of the most important elements in every marketing plan is the calendar. It's important to not only decide which elements need to be produced, but also determine how, who, and when they will be produced. Without a defined calendar it is very easy for marketing projects to take the back-burner and never get accomplished and out the door.

Every project should have a defined start and due date. Depending upon how you produce your projects this will vary, but a good rule of thumb is to allow anywhere from 6 to 8 weeks from start to finish on most projects. This gives plenty of time for the project to run smoothly and each phase be accomplished correctly. Larger projects can take longer and may require they get broken into phases.

Consider the use of campaigns instead of promotions. By creating an overarching campaign umbrella and theme under which all products and promotions fall, you can eliminate lots of time. Campaigns typically are also more memorable since they have greater frequency and run during a longer period of time.

One last, very important thought! If you find yourself using the same excuse that we don't have enough time to get all our projects completed on time, there's a high likelihood you need to consider outsourcing some of your work. Remember that marketing that does not get out the door will get ZERO results!

Marketing Budget, Project Implementation Timetable & ROI

Every Strategic Marketing & Growth Plan must also include an itemized budget. Every project should be clearly broken down and costs itemized so there are no surprises. This budgeting and planning process may take some time to develop each year, but it's worth the effort and key to getting management and your BOD to approve marketing spending.

You can tie-in your budget and Marketing Implementation Calendar using a simple chart like the one shown here. This will help you to stay on track with your approved marketing projects and assure they get completed on time and on-budget. Keep in mind that some of these may change or adjust as the year progresses.

If you can justify your budget with proven ROI, getting marketing budgets approved is a no-brainer. Marketing is not an expense, it's an investment when done right. You will get all the money you need if what you are doing works. There are lots of very simple ways to track ROI and we would be glad to share these with you if desired. If you can show results, money is no object.

About Colorworks and MMSS

Membership Marketing Support Services (MMSS) has been focused on the credit union and financial services industry for more than 30 years. As a leader in strategic marketing services, MMSS has enjoyed the privilege of helping more than 2,000 financial clients nationwide.

Membership Marketing joined forces with Colorworks Graphic Services, Inc. (CGS) in 2011. Since 1923, CGS has continually evolved and sought new ways to provide clients with innovative marketing ideas, graphics, printing and an array of related promotional services. This long-standing tradition of growth and change continues today as services constantly expand and evolve into a variety of businesses, industries and clients.

We announced in early 2019 that Colorworks Graphic Services, Inc. and Membership Marketing rebranded themselves under the unified name COLORWORKS. One company, one updated brand, one unified vision for the future, many flavors of clients.

As one united team, we'll continue to focus on marketing initiatives and projects for a diverse group of clients and industries. We strive to provide each client with leading-edge marketing strategies, seamless project execution, and most of all, results!

We are truly grateful for the support our clients have shown us, and look forward to the journey ahead and the amazing opportunities that await us all.

Sincerely,
